

NEW "RAILWAY" TRAIN
FLIES THROUGH AIR AT
300-MILE-HOUR SPEED

Inventor Demonstrates Novel
Carriage Operated by "Magnetic Repulsion."

LONDON, May 8.—Emil Bachelets, a French scientist who has lived in America, is showing in London a model of a remarkable electric aerial "railway" on which it is possible to develop a speed of 300 miles an hour and more. Railway chiefs and post-office engineers who have seen it are said to be amazed.

The track consists of a succession of electric coils arranged at short intervals, with solenoids, or pulling magnets, shaped like tunnels placed at longer intervals. When the current is turned on a cigar shaped car is raised from the coils by magnetic repulsion as distinguished from magnetic attraction, and is held suspended in the air, the only connection between the car and the track being the brushes used for contact purposes.

Then the current in the solenoids is turned on, with the result that the car is drawn at immense speed toward a solenoid, through which it is carried by the momentum developed until it comes within the influence of the succeeding solenoid and so onward.

The principle of magnetic repulsion is declared to be a discovery.

Bachelets, who has worked twenty years on the invention, says he discovered that certain metals offer a retarding influence to the magnetic force flowing from electric coil energized by an alternating current. This retarding influence sets up eddy currents, which cause the reverse of magnetic attraction, viz., magnetic repulsion. In other words, the effect of a magnetic coil on certain metals is to repel instead of attract them. One of these metals is aluminum, which is used in the present model.

One of the leading English railroads has offered Bachelets five miles of track for a practical test of the invention.
